ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

A process for keeping and/or restoring communications within a network with planned resources, the network includes stations arranged in at least one group, wherein each group is composed of at least two stations that are linked together, and the links between the at least two stations can change with a time. The process includes the following steps: associating a dummy station to one of the groups, the dummy station includes different resources, wherein the different resources are allocated to the stations in the groups; setting-up a relay station configured to keep and/or to restore communications between the stations of the groups, based on information about how a group structure evolves; and reallocating resources of the dummy station to the relay station after setting-up the relay station, based on information about how a group structure evolves.
